The Times, as a matter-of-course, sucors-at the recent Bime allie Conference, and warns Mr. Balfour that "no man can combine "the incompatible functions of the apostle "of a fad, and of a responsible statesman "without injury to his usefulness." We hope that Mr. BALFOUR, so far from injuring his usefulness by his advocacy of bimetallism, may ere long be in a position to translate his opinions into action and assist -re-establishing the double standard. On one point, however, it must be admitted that The Times makes a point in its criticism of the proceedings of the Conference. THE Hongkong Government, in its paterna solicitude for the welfare of the Colony, has undertaken a great and herois task. We are frequently told that this is a doubting and sceptical age, in which good motives are often maligned and excellent intentions persistently misunderstood, but if our Legislature can help it there will in the future be no such reproach on the intelligent community of this Colony, for on Monday next a Bill is to be introduced entitled "an Or dinance to remove doubts," etc. This is indeed one of those gentle and solicitous attentions which do not frequently characterise the actions of legislative assemblies. It is at once fatherly and useful. The Colony is dubiously considering some question and looks appealingly towards A little sprinkled on the handkorshief or on its legal officers to remove its doubts and entton wool and kept in front of the nose and give it a right understanding. > The Foreign Representatives appear to us to be slightly to blame. They were to have held a meeting to discuss the question of examination of vessots last week; but for some reason or other the meeting has been postponed. Hence each Representative has acted independently. The British and German Consulates have issued instructions for the examination of vessels flying the English and Gorman flags, but other vessels are allowed free entry. This is sourcely satisfactory, and decidedly untain to the German and British vessels entering this port. What is required is united action on a question of so grave a nature. There ought, one would think to be simultaneous action on the part of all the Consulates, and every Dutch. Danish. French, and Norwegian vessel subjected to examination as well as British and German thips. Had a meeting of the Foreign-Representatives been held and the matter fairly discussed the absurdity of examination for one and exemption for another would have been at once apparent, and united action have prevented so strange an anomaly as at present is in force. The Foreign Representatives might have also recognised the necessity for keeping the Health Officer permanently stationed at Paknam-though this position is at not desirable—in order to be in constant readiness kept at Paknam the whole day without examination; and had there been any symptoms of plague on board it is not easy to see how the ship's officers could prevent coolies from going ashore, and spreading, the disease in the village. The examination as now conducted works clumsily, and if there is any serious need why vessels should be examined-and we believe there is then some better system ought to be agreed upon by the Foreign Representatives in conjunction with H.S.M. Government. If all vessels are to be examined at Paknam it is arrive. The tides are well known now in Bangourately determined. One who comes to consider modern Europe from the impartial standpoint of hygiene, facilit alarmed over its gloomy future. In the beginming of the present contary there was plenty of room in Europe, and life was more regulat now the population is increasing day by day, and the sanitary condition goes from bad worse. The soil of ail inhabited Surpre is foul ed. Pure water is utterly scuree. The rivers have become receptacles for all the orderes of the towns. No man of culture would risk drink water from the Seine, from the Thames. from the Spree, or even from the Danube in Vienna . Of course no one would use drinking water from the Mescow River-no more than from the Ganges, which, by a religious superstition, has been made a barial place for the Hindoo. The corpses rotting in the giver con- quialism, "swept the bband" so far as these taminate its waters. Thus the Hamburgers drink their own diluted excreta We should wonder if there were no pholora The same is the case with the Thames. Owing to the accumulation of orderes, to the dirtiness of the soil and rivers, all the parts of the world are well provided with their own infectious maladies and are all the time treating one another: Europe-with typhus, Asia-with cholera. Africa-with malarla, America-with yellow fever. But Europa is the hardest up, as its population is effeminated by civilization, while the fith remains the same as in the olden times. The civilized life of the Europeans has become too complex for the primitive systems of drainage; it stands in need of sanitary improvements of a higher quality. Whoever has visited the large European centres, Paris, Viguna, Berlin, not to speak of the primitively dirto Moscow, and has taken the trouble to go farther than the fashionable parts, will testify to the dr. adfully digty condition of the so-called slams. Drainage alone is powerless here. Moreover, the drainage system is apt to carry away no more than ten per cent. of all the garbage; all slab, kitchen matter, street fre al matters, oto. -in a word, twenty per cent, of the refu e-is carried out of the city by hor es. Still this is far from being a thorough cleaning; the greater part of the refuse rots on the ground, infects the soil, or dries and spreads in the air as dust. and is then breathed by the inhabitants of the habitations clean. Cholera has thus become the most powerful agent of sanitary progress. city, liquid as well as solid. this stove, termed cell, is vary simple. Sunday night a small quantity of coal is put in the stove, underneath the garbage. The fire lasts by itself until all the garbage is burnt. The stove is a metal one and is placed in a brick building, with high pipes carrying away the smoke and egases. The stove may be located in the most populated districts of the city, there being absolutely no danger of fire. Appliances are provided for keeping away smoke and harmful gases, and the tenants of the neighbouring houses do not complain, do not know even, of the existence of this stove. The cost of its construction amounts to from $1,400 to $7,000, according to the size. It burns from twenty-four to thirty-five tons a week, and the expense amounts to twenty-four cents per ton. Very little service is required: one workman can attend to several stoves in the same building. Moreover the expense is made up by the income derived from it. The ashes make a good manure.
